

EUROPEAN RESORTS.

FRANCE.

EUROPEAN RESORTS.

FRANCE.

PARIS--LYON--MEDITERRANEE
FRANCE'S GREATEST RAILWAY.

Linking together her foremost cities, resorts, watering places, mountains and seaside sections, into a tourist's highway of wondrous sights and entrancing scenery.

Through Routes to SWITZERLAND ALGERIA
ITALY SPAIN EGYPT

Full particulars and information from
INTERNATIONAL SLEEPING CAR COMPANY
General Agents
270 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. CITY

PARIS, FRANCE.

PARIS, FRANCE.

Paris "This famous Hotel is a favourite stopping place for American visitors."
THE GRAND HOTEL
"The Hub of Paris."
Rebuilt Throughout
Newly Furnished
Contains every Comfort and Luxury
In Modern Construction.
"Admittedly the most Comfortable Hotel in Europe."

ELYSEE PALACE HOTEL PARIS
Situated on high ground midway between Arc de Triomphe and Place de la Concorde. Opened in April, 1910. Part of the Hotel. Special Terms January to March. Telegraph Address: "Ely Palace," Paris. Standard rooms, including bath. Family Comforts. After Dinner Concerts. Best English and French Cuisines. Unique Restaurant. American Bar. Built by Butterfield, New York Office. The International Sleeping Car Co., 281 Fifth Ave., and Town & Country Bureau, 389 Fifth Ave.

HOTEL CONTINENTAL, PARIS
The Grand Hotel. Book in Advance. TARIFFS from TOWN & COUNTRY, 289 5th Ave., New York.

DRESDEN, SAXONY.

DRESDEN, SAXONY.

DRESDEN HOTEL BELLEVUE
General Manager, R. Ronnefeld
DRESDEN The "CONTINENTAL"
Leading Hotel. Opposite Station. Manager E. GOESSEL.

FRANZENSBAD, AUSTRIA.

FRANZENSBAD, AUSTRIA.

FRANZENSBAD WORLD FAMOUS SPA for the Treatment of HEART TROUBLES & FEMALE COMPLAINTS
1½ hrs. from Carlsbad. Apply for Booklet. Dorland Agency, 289 5th Ave., N. Y.

AUTHOR WHO HOAXED HARVARD

SWITZERLAND

Tarnott caused by Richard Washburn Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time in turmoil. Information that the janitor of one of the college laboratories had used a jar of microbes and that all those who had been near the laboratory should report at once to the college doctor; that so and so of the crew squad had rowed half out of his shell, but had reached shore without difficulty, and that the president and fellow of Harvard College had decided not to offer President McKinley an honorary degree was given with the utmost gravity.

A statement in the fake of the Crimson was making more money than was anticipated and that $1.50 on all $3 bills sent would be returned that after more than a month of treatment to the Crimson, the fake was discontinued.

A sum being in the night over the Crimson office corroborated this announcement and was another part of the hoax. Its com-

SWITZERLAND

Child when he was an Editor.

The March number of the Bookman gives some facts about Richard Washburn Child, whose novel, "Jim Bands," was published a few months ago. It seems that Mr. Child when at Harvard University was the originator of a joke which has become perpetuated in the university. The Bookman describes the incident as follows:

"While an undergraduate at Harvard Mr. Child happened to be among other things, one of the board of editors of the Lampoon. The Crimson, the Harvard undergraduate daily, had announced that it would print no edition on Memorial Day, 1910. At Mr. Child's suggestion the Lampoon issued a fake number of the Crimson, definitely enough caricatured to deceive all but the most observant readers."

The appearance of the college paper was accurately reproduced, even to certain typographical errors, for which the Crimson had been notorious, but the contents were such that the whole Cambridge community was for a time